SUPREME COURT, U.S.

QUESTION PRESENTED

Can any United States court proceed further in any criminal prosecution case where in personal jurisdiction over the "person" of the accused has been challenged by him prior to a general appearance under coercion, before such in personam jurisdiction is proven by the accuser?

Petitioner would show that this Court held in Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 2 L.Ed. 60 (1803), and restated in Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U.S. 264, 304 (1821):

"It is most true that this Court will not take jurisdiction if it should not; but it is equally true, that it must take jurisdiction if it should. The judiciary cannot, as the legislature may, avoid a measure because it approaches the confines of the Constitution. We cannot pass it by because it is doubtful. With whatever doubts, with whatever difficulties, a case may be attended, we must decide it if it be brought before us. We have no more right to decline the exercise of jurisdiction which is given, than to usurp that which is not given. The one or the other would be treason to the Constitution." (Emphasis added.)

SUMMARY OF THE CASE

Petitioner was indicted by a federal grand jury, seated by a legislative tribunal, created by Congress under Article I, Section 8, clause 9, Constitution for the United States of America, in criminal case No. 85-00223A, Eastern District of Virginia, on October 16, 1985, without identifying the nature and cause in the indictment as required by the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution for the United States of America.

By Special Appearance Motion, filed May 5, 1989, this Petitioner challenged the jurisdiction of the Article I federal statutory tribunal issuing the indictment and the arrest warrant, setting out with specificity the denial of in personam jurisdiction of said federal district court over the 'person' of the Petitioner. (See attached Special Appearance Motion of Petitioner). This Special Appearance Motion was filed by Petitioner while incarcerated in Seattle, Washington, awaiting disposition of another cause.

Despite the fact that no general appearance had occurred for the purpose of establishing in personam jurisdiction, the district court erroneously proceeded on the pretext of taking judicial notice, while classing Petitioner's Special Appearance Motion as "pro se", and adopted the government's partial and inadequate response, thus denying Petitioner's relief sought in the Special Appearance Motion. In violation of due process of law, the court failed to compel the accusing party to prove in personam jurisdiction over the accused as demanded in the Special Appearance Motion.

Over Petitioner's objections, the district court, upon commencement of these proceedings, in the forced presence of Petitioner, appointed counsel for Petitioner, which counsel fraudulently induced Petitioner to enter a plea of "not guilty" while Petitioner was under intense mental and emotional distress, thus permitting the continuation of court proceedings through coercion and duress.

The jury, at trial, found Petitioner guilty and the court sentenced Petitioner to a term of thirty-six months incarceration.

Appeal of said conviction was handled by the same counsel appointed by the court, with no addressing of the issue of in personam jurisdiction contested by Petitioner in his Special Appearance Motion.
